Austin Texas, Sept 25, 1909.

Mr E C Bartholomew, Supt Parks & Public Property, City.

Dear Sir :

Since the destruction of the Tips Foundry and Machine shops by fire on Sept 11th, I have made a careful inspection of our plant to see what protection we have in case of fire. In the first place fires always break out when least expected and at a time when few men are on hand to battle with it. I find the most likely plan for a fire to start is under the engine room floor where the high voltage wires lead from the generators to the switch board. Should a short circuit occur on any of these wires from one cause or another it would be impossible to check the fire until all the generators could be shut down. This I fear would give a fire too great a start before sufficient water could be put on to check it. The burning of this floor would ruin all our engines, generators, switchboards, in fact the City would be plunged in darkness and without power just as it was when the dam was destroyed, except that the water supply would not be effected.

Now since the destruction of the Tins machine shops, I have been investigating the merits of fire extinguishers. On Sept 21st, I invited the Agent of the Seagraves Fire Extinguisher Co, of Columbus, Ohio, to bring one three (3) gallon extinguisher to the plant. I built a large fire out in the open and had the Agent show me what his apparatus could do. The fire disappeared so quickly that I believe the City should lose no time in placing an order for ten (10) three (3) gallon extinguishers, to be placed as follows:

Two (2) in the Boiler room.

Four (4) in the Engine room.

Two (2) in the cellar at the foot of each flight of steps.

All the engine oil is kept in the cellar and water would only make the fire spread over the whole cellar, whereas the fire extinguisher would put it out. One (1) extinguisher in each work shop as our coal oil and gasoline tanks are kept there. Water would be of little value on this building. Therefore, I recommend the purchase of ten (10) of the three (3) gallon "Seagraves Model Quick Acting Fire Extinguishers", price ten dollars ($10.00) each.

Respectfully

Walter Johnson, Chief Engineer.
